

What is the Affordable Housing Rental Program?

The program offers rental housing, commonly referred to as “affordable housing”, for people with moderate incomes. The rent is set at the low end of the private rental housing market for each community.

Affordable housing is available in over 80 communities in Saskatchewan and is suitable for seniors and families.

For families, affordable housing is intended to be short-term until a family is able to afford to buy or rent a home in the private housing market. For seniors, affordable housing is intended for the long-term.

Who is the program for?

Anyone may apply, but affordable housing is intended for people with a moderate income who are mentally and physically capable of living independently with or without supports from family, community, and health or social services agencies.

Applications are approved based on income with priority given to applicants who have the lowest income.
